Fuel your tummy where you fuel your tank

L-R: Chevron owner Sonny Vitmani opened Fresh Bites in January; Chef Marcello Tigist prepares cheesesteaks, burgers and more Monday through Saturday at the convenience store's made-to-order counter; Osmaida Torres and Melissa Orozco prepare authentic Mexican breakfast and lunch daily at BP's Taquito Express; Taquito's owner Chris Murphy will also open a new concept in the Winter's Chapel Road Shell station this fall.

Bye-bye, roller dogs. Hello, foodie favorites.

All across the country, gas stations are upping their food game to capitalize on the consistent traffic and quick, smaller-meal tastes of younger consumers. The latest food service trend has reached Dunwoody, too, where customers are finding quality, fresh-to-order eats, as well as tables and chairs to enjoy their meals right inside local convenience stores.

"I've told all my friends about it, and now they're hooked, too," said Jamie Ruark, a big fan of Taquito Express located inside the BP station at the corner of Mt. Vernon and Chamblee Dunwoody Roads. Ruark, who grew up in Dunwoody and is now raising his family here, takes every opportunity to share his passion for the great Mexican food he discovered several years ago. "It's authentic Mexican food. I want them to be successful."

His favorite is the al pastor, a spicy combination of pork and pineapple. It's one of more than a dozen meat and fish options that are prepared by seasoned chefs into dishes that include quesadillas, tacos, nachos, tamales and empanadas at Taquito Express.

Owned by David Kwon and former food truck proprietor Chris Murphy, the food counter is open for breakfast each morning at 6 a.m. with a full array of breakfast tacos and juices. The restaurant is open Monday through Friday until 6 p.m. and Saturdays from 6 a.m. to 3 p.m. Murphy runs 15 Atlanta area gas station restaurants including a second Taquito's location in Dunwoody at Chamblee Dunwoody and I-285.

Murphy's cooking staff is made up of three women who have cooked traditional Mexican food all of their lives. "They have true passion for their work, and take great pride in every aspect of the menu, right down to their fresh-made salsas and traditional Mexican hibiscus and mango teas," he said.

Just a half block away, Fresh Bites in the Chevron on Chamblee Dunwoody Road at Dunwoody Village opened in January and is serving breakfast, plus made-to-order burgers, Philly cheese steaks, fries, quesadillas, tortas, milkshakes and more. The restaurant, with indoor and outdoor seating, is open Mondays through Saturdays from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Chef Marcello Tigist honed his craft at restaurants across the country, including Woody's CheeseSteaks in Midtown. He is especially proud of his unique recipe cheesesteak sauce that he offers on the side of the hot, melty sandwiches filled with peppers, mushrooms and onions.

Fresh Bites' breakfast menu often brings lines stretched out the door for the morning's bacon, two kinds of sausage, eggs, hot biscuits and fresh-squeezed orange juice.

"I'm usually there three days a week," said Harold Kelly, a resident of Ashford Center Parkway and long-time Dunwoody resident. "They have the best biscuits in the world."

Dunwoody Chevron owner Sonny Vitmani managed a similar concept in Tennessee before purchasing the Dunwoody store. Like Murphy, he recognized from the beginning that a clean and tidy presentation would be critical for enticing customers and proving that great food could come from a gas station.

"We hired a consultant during the restaurant's build-out to ensure that we were able to set up and maintain the highest standards of hygiene," Vitmani said. "We installed the same kind of system that is used in five-star restaurants."

A third, wildly popular Dunwoody gas station restaurant, Big Dave's in the Shell station at 5020 Winters Chapel Road, had lines of customers who loved their cheesesteaks, but the restaurant ultimately outgrew its location. Owner Derrick Hayes closed the location in July to re-open two new stores in Atlanta and Chamblee.

Murphy from Taquito's will open a new concept in the location this fall. Called Macadoo's Diversity and Comfort Food, the menu will feature fried fish, wings and collard greens with urban, Hispanic and African influences.

Breaking bread, giving back: Malachi's Storehouse

Malachi:

*From the Hebrew name meaning
"my messenger" or "my angel"*

www.malachisstorehouse.org

Isaac Williams (at left in dark blue) has worked in some of the finest kitchens in Atlanta, including the Ritz-Carlton and Hyatt Regency. But he's most proud of his work at Malachi's Storehouse in Dunwoody, where the kitchen can be a lifeline.

"It makes me feel great. I like helping feed people," Isaac said. "It keeps me motivated."

Like most of the volunteers at Malachi's Storehouse, Williams started as a client after falling on hard times due to a health crisis.

An outreach ministry of St. Patrick's Episcopal Church, Malachi's Storehouse serves more than 700 meals a week for those in need of emergency support.

Started in 1991, the all-volunteer nonprofit also runs a market-style food pantry and clothing closet every Wednesday. Last year, Malachi's Storehouse distributed 680,000 pounds of food to 36,000 people.

The majority of clients, 66 percent, visit Malachi's Storehouse only once or twice a year. Twelve percent visit seven or more times.

"I love this community. I feel a real connection to the people here," said April Toms, who started volunteering five years ago. "It has helped me learn that we are all one."

Malachi's Storehouse relies on private financial donations, grants and partnerships with other nonprofits, including the Atlanta Community Food Bank, Second Helpings, Helping Feed Atlanta, I Care Atlanta and Helping Mamas. Stores like Kroger, Trader Joe's, Whole Foods and Costco donate food for the pantry.

Volunteers with the Dunwoody Community Garden bring fresh, organic produce from Brook Run Park, which is right across the street from St. Patrick's. Donations now exceed 3,000 pounds annually. The group also built raised garden beds at the church. Called the Garden of Eatin', it's tended by Malachi clients.

"It truly is farm to table," Toms added. "Our mission is to nourish the body and spirit. Everyone is welcome."

Taking root: Dunwoody's aeroponic gardens

An exterior courtyard, previously used as a smoking area at Dunwoody's Crown Pointe office complex, has been repurposed as a tower garden. Smoking on the courtyard is now prohibited, and the area has become a beautiful and popular spot for relaxing and unwinding during the work day.

In fact, aeroponic gardens are popping up in interior lobby spaces, sunny rooftops and courtyards all over Dunwoody, while harvests are being shared with area food banks, sold at office building fruit and vegetable markets, and as menu sustenance for local restaurants.

Like hydroponic farming, aeroponic gardens require no soil. The difference: The roots of hydroponic plants are maintained in water; aeroponic plants grow in air while an electric pumping system on the vertical tower drips and circulates water and nutrients as needed. Each tower can produce more than 75 pounds of produce each year.

While aeroponic gardening is not new — botanists began experimentation in the 1920s and some of the science's greatest strides have come via Disney's Epcot Center and NASA—the business model for Atlanta-based Copiana is one-of-a-kind. Launched in March of 2018, the company leases, maintains and harvests the tower gardens. Staff members—also known as Copiana's "produce whisperers," visit twice each week to plant, replant, measure pH levels and administer nutrients, harvest the produce, set up farmer's markets, teach classes on the technology, and more.

"We have installed more than 20 tower gardens," said Copiana CEO Jim McCutcheon. "The majority of them are in Dunwoody. The vertical earth-friendly design uses 90 percent less land and water than is normally required to grow produce."

With aeroponic gardens, 100 percent of the nutrients and water used is recycled in

Tower gardening is bringing bounties of leafy greens, herbs, tomatoes, cucumbers, peppers and fruits to Dunwoody—sans soil, and in some unexpected spots.

*The vertical towers can vary in design and height and can be placed inside or outside. A seven-stack tower, as shown above, can yield up to 75 pounds of produce each year with harvests every two or three weeks. this closed-system technology. More, the pH-balanced ionic minerals and nutrients protect the plants to the point that very little or no pesticides are required to keep the plants healthy. The tower-to-table design can also cut out packaging, shipping and storage.

During this 20th anniversary year, the Perimeter Community Improvement Districts (PCIDs) are embracing new connections.

“I see a greater appetite for bringing together the commercial and residential sides of Dunwoody,” said Ann Hanlon, executive director of the PCIDs. “The new pedestrian bridge is a big first step. I think as the Perimeter builds out, more people will want to be able to walk and ride their bikes there.”

The PCIDs contributed $200,000 to the construction of the bridge between the Georgetown community and Perimeter Center East, which opened earlier this year. The organizations also pledged money for the Ashford Dunwoody Commuter Trail, which will run between Hammond Drive and Mount Vernon Road.

“It’s such a cool time to be here,” said Hanlon, who is also a Dunwoody resident. The PCIDs are made up of Perimeter property owners, like Hines, IHG and Perimeter Mall, that pay additional property taxes to help enhance transportation infrastructure and quality of life improvements for businesses, employees, residents and visitors in the Perimeter market.

“We’re like the icing on the cake. We do the extra stuff to help so people can get in and out of the Perimeter more easily,” Hanlon added. On an annual basis, the PCIDs spend about $1 million to hire officers for traffic control during the afternoon rush. The self-taxing districts also pay for landscaping, decorative lighting and illuminated street signs in the Perimeter.

The PCIDs have two boards: the Central (DeKalb) Perimeter CID Board and the Fulton Perimeter CID Board. Central PCID was established first in 1999. “Even back then, this area struggled with traffic,” Ann explained. “Big property owners got together and decided they had to do something about it. The CID concept was revolutionary at the time.”

Since then, the PCIDs have developed strong partnerships with the City of Dunwoody and other local, state and federal officials and agencies. The PCIDs pushed for and helped fund the diverging diamond interchange at Ashford-Dunwoody Road and the Perimeter Center Parkway Bridge, known as the “Flyover Bridge.” This year’s budget is $8 million.

“We operate from a regional perspective,” Hanlon added. “So much has changed in the last 20 years. We want to help shape the change in the next 20.”

Athletic Fields

Drone photos show areas under construction at Dunwoody's 110-acre Brook Run Park. The Great Lawn area will include a terraced amphitheater, event lawn and free-play field, a rental pavilion and restrooms. Artificial turf athletic fields will include a concession pavilion, a disc golf course, restrooms and space for a future playground. Additional parking areas and picnic shelters are also in the works. The new facilities are set to open in early 2020.

Dunwoody Police Officer Nathan Daley is on the road to recovery with the help of sweets from all over the country.

Officer Daley suffered serious injuries in early August when he was dragged by a runaway driver onto I-285. Right after his release from the hospital, he taped a message for the community: "It does look as bad as it feels, but I will bounce back ten times stronger. I love you guys. Thank you so much for your support. I accept donations in the form of treats, cookies, chocolate chip cookies, cupcakes with sprinkles – vanilla or red velvet."

He was joking about the treats. But the response is no joke. People from Dunwoody and beyond have baked, bought and sent in everything on his list and more. Fortunately for the rest of the police department, he doesn't mind sharing.

October is Arts & Culture Month

Organized by Discover Dunwoody and celebrated in conjunction with National Arts & Humanities Month, Dunwoody's annual Arts & Culture Month brings together the city's diverse arts, culture, and nature organizations and members.

Throughout October, Dunwoody residents and visitors will have the chance to experience special exhibits and activities highlighting the area's commitment to the arts. Participating organizations include the Chattahoochee Handweavers Guild, Dunwoody Fine Arts, Dunwoody Nature Center, Dunwoody Preservation Trust, Dunwoody Woman's Club, Marcus Jewish Community Center, Spruill Center for the Arts, Stage Door Players and the City of Dunwoody.

Dunwoody Parks & Recreation needs your help to create a rock painting art installation at Brook Run Park near Veterans Memorial. As part of Dunwoody Volunteer Day on Oct. 12, join Painting With A Twist from 9 a.m. to noon to create painted rocks that will be placed throughout the park and along the Dunwoody Trailway. Participants can also paint pumpkins to take home.

Next steps for Village Overlay district

A community meeting held in late June set the stage for new zoning regulations in Dunwoody's Village Overlay district, which includes Dunwoody Village and the adjacent retail areas west of Chamblee Dunwoody Road. A packed house of citizens heard a presentation prepared by planning consultants from TSW, and then participated in walking tours of the village and offered feedback on the development options presented.

Feedback and exchanged ideas have been used to create adaptations to the area's zoning codes. A second community meeting will be held Saturday, Nov. 16 to finalize verbiage and direction of the recommended new codes in preparation for review by Dunwoody's planning commission and council. Revisions to the existing codes are a necessary step in preparation of all future development. Less restrictive building and zoning codes will pave the way for development in the Overlay District as new permits are requested.

Make MENTAL HEALTH a priority

NEW FOR FALL 2019: The Dunwoody Police Department is making mental health a top priority by offering Mental Health First Aid training for Dunwoody residents.

The eight-hour course teaches participants how to identify, understand and respond to signs of mental illnesses and substance-use disorders. The training offers skills needed to reach out and provide initial help and support to someone who may be developing a mental health or substance-use problem or experiencing a crisis.

The first class is scheduled Saturday, Oct. 19 from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. in Dunwoody's new North Shallowford Annex building located at 4470 North Shallowford Road.

Please contact Sgt. Robert Parsons at 678-382-6909 for more information or visit mentalhealthfirstaid.org.
